Summary of issue/concern: *

The current in-person secondary school model, with the one class a week, quadmester cohort system, is not working. The courses are too compressed and rushed to allow for absorption of material and to get help if needed. As per the tens of thousands of responses to the recent OCDSB survey on return to school, as a result of this model, students are suffering academically and from a mental health perspective. We need to plan for a better school year for September.

Recommendation(s) for resolution of issue: *

That the OCDSB actively and authentically engage with students and parents and work to develop an approach to secondary school for September 2021 that integrates academic, mental health and social considerations as well as meeting public health guidelines.
